Types & Forms of Flavours

Natural Flavours

Natural flavours are made from a combination of naturally derived flavouring ingredients to provide top, bottom and heart notes. While the flavouring ingredients are natural, they are not necessarily derived from the actual fruit or plant which the flavour is designed to create or replicate.

Liquid and Emulsion

Liquid flavours are manufactured by a cold blending process, using a liquid carrier. The carrier will be selected based on the extract application of the flavour. Depending on the carrier(s) used, the flavour will be either a standard mixture or an emulsion. Emulsions are made when the carrier includes both water soluble and oil soluble substances and is stabilised by the addition of an emulsifier.

Powder (Plated or Spray-Dried)

Powdered flavours will either be spray-dried or a plated powder. A plated powder is produced through a cold blending process by mixing the flavour with the powder carrier(s). A spray-dried flavour is produced by spraying the flavour on a carrier matrix of maltodextrin and instant gum producing a high quality encapsulated flavour with better stability (for example for applications involving heat or intense processing) and shelf life.
